CLIVE LORD MEMORIAL MEDAL 2010

The Clive Lord Memorial Medal was established in 1930 and is awarded by the Royal Society of Tasmania to a scholar distinguished for research in Tasmanian science or history. It is awarded every three years unless particular circumstances dictate otherwise. The Award alternates between the fields of science and history. In 2010 it will be awarded for a distinguished contribution to Tasmanian History.

The recipient will deliver the Clive Lord Memorial Lecture and, if not a member of the Society, will be offered free membership for one year.

- Nominations are sought from members of the Society.
- Nominators are not restricted to members of the Society.
- Self nominations are not allowed.
- The Honours Committee of the Royal Society of Tasmania also acts as a 'Search Committee', considering names prompted by its own deliberations.

Details of procedures to be followed are given overleaf.

Nominations must be received no later than August 31, 2010.

Procedure for Nomination

The first page of the nomination should list:

- The name of the medal.
- The name of the candidate and contact address.
- The name of the proposer and contact address.

This should be followed by a description of the candidate's achievements relevant to the Clive Lord Medal. It should be no longer than one page and should be written concisely and in language that is widely understood outside the candidate's field of research. The candidate's contributions to science, history or other field of learning, industry or society should be clearly stated.

A full curriculum vitae should be provided in confidence. It should include the candidate's date of birth, the date of receipt of degrees, and a full list of significant published works. Where the candidate's standing relies on co-authored papers, the candidate's role in those significant papers should be indicated.

The Honours Committee of the Royal Society of Tasmania has limited ability to seek additional information and therefore depends on the nomination papers to provide a full and fair account of the candidate's suitability, taking into account the criteria of the particular medal.

Applications should be addressed to the:
